BRYANTSVILLE

FAIR

Attracts Large Crowd and Proves Great Success

Those who attended the Community Fair at Bryantville last Saturday are unanimous in one opinion, that it was one of the most successful from every standpoint that was ever undertaken by the people of that community. Probably one thousand or more people saw the splendid display that practically filled the school building, a display that would have done credit to a whole county and a much better one than is frequently seen at many of the county fairs throughout the state.

To give some idea of the interest shown by the people of the five school districts, to which the exhibits were limited, there were seven hundred and twenty-four entries. It required the services of ten or twelve judges, which consumed several hours hard work, so close and keen was the competition in every department.

One who has never associated with an affair of this character, can hardly conceive of the work which an undertaking of this magnitude entails. The promoters of this fair and those who so faithfully worked to make it a success, deserves the gratitude of the entire community. The chairman of the various committees worked early and late, after it was decided that a Community Fair would be held.

The Chamber of Commerce of Lancaster and Garrard county very kindly donated the services of the Lancaster Cornet Band, which dispensed music the entire day, very much to the delight and pleasure of the large crowd. The promoters of the fair are exceedingly grateful to the Chamber of Commerce for this liberality and asks us to state through these columns. Plans are already being made to hold another during the fall of 1923, at which time it is thought a two day fair instead of one will be held.

LANCASTER HIGH

Wins Second Game of Football

Lancaster High School Football team defeated the strong Nicholasville High School team on the former's ground Friday afternoon by the overwhelming score of 78 to 0. Captain Cox followed by his band of green and white warriors went on the field determined to win the contest and fought the visitors off their feet in the first three minutes of play, although it was a real game of ball for the first quarter, but Lancaster High School team was too speedy for the Jessamine county lads.

Athletic Director and head coach McRoberts in the beginning of the second quarter had perfect confidence in his men and from that time on played second string men, both in the line and backfield and they showed up well under fire. It is true that Estes on Right end together with Henry Cox at Left Guard and Henry at Right Guard, are playing in their first year having made the first team, nevertheless, Coach McRoberts played Gouch, Brown, Creech, Speake, Lear, Williams, P. Anderson, Moore, Stapp, Hagan, Thompson, Arnold and Elliott through the remainder of the game, and played exceptionally good ball and within a short time, we dare predict that his second string men will be able to overcome his regular first team.

Coach McRoberts started his own to hit the line and his first string men consisting of W. Anderson, Crutchfield, Henry, Bratton, Cox, Henry, Kavanaugh, and Estes for the line held like old timers and were there with the goods, and played a master game. In the back field were Captain Cox, W. Robinson, C. Gastineau and V. Gastineau, all of whom made gains at will through the visitor's line and their runs and interferences were perfect. The first few minutes of playing found the ball over the goal line for the first marker for Lancaster High School and from that time on touchdowns were made at will, either by the forward passes, trick plays or "hit the line" stuff. Captain McCarthy for the Nicholasville choppers played a good game of ball and even with such big odds never gave up and was constantly after his men up until the game was over to score on L. H. S., but the hard work on the part of the local lads kept them from scoring.

Chiropractor Not New

For generations in sections of Europe the laymen have been using a form of Chiropractic adjustments in a crude way.

The old method was for the father, after working all day, to lie down on the floor and have one of the younger children walk up and down his spine. This proved restful and invigorating.

Today the modern Chiropractor achieves almost perfect results by hand adjustments. Chiropractic is a discovery of an old principle—the perfection, in fact, of a proved principle.

LEGION

Elects Officers Tuesday, October 3rd, 1922

The local Post of the American Legion are calling for a special meeting on the night of Tuesday, October 3rd, which is next week for the purpose of electing officers.

This is one of the best posts to be found in the State, and the work they have accomplished is very gratifying to the local members. The present Post Commander and Adjutant, namely: Billy Miller and Robert Meadows, have worked hard for the Post and will continue to fight for the American Legion, and as the time is now at hand to elect new officers for the local Post many are being mentioned, all of whom would make ideal officers. This is a duty that all service men in Garrard county should see to and that is to get as many of the ex-service men into this meeting as possible as the work of this Post will on next Tuesday night be turned over to the newly elected officers.

This meeting will be held in the I. O. O. F. Hall over Curry and Gully's store and the meeting will be opened promptly at 7:45 P. M.

Among the many who are being mentioned for officers of the Hendel Sarford Post and who are worthy legionnaires, who will make most creditable officers are Alex. Doty, A. B. Joseph, Robt. H. Hayes at present a member of the American Legion Department of Kentucky; Thomas Merritt, Chas. Land, Andy Croucher, Mark Jennings, Rev. Willie Rogers, Lee Ledford and Dr. J. E. Edwards.

Let every service man in the county assemble at the I. O. O. F. Hall in Lancaster, Ky., on Tuesday night, October 3rd, 1922, at 7:45 P. M., and support his candidate and help put him over.

Athletics

With the foot ball season now on in full bloom, the Lancaster High School is rapidly winning great prominence in the foot ball world as far as the High Schools are concerned, and with this year's prospects they are figuring on winning all of their games and hope new points in their favor. Athletic Director John McRoberts, who is also acting in the capacity of head Coach has arranged some of the best games ever known to Lancaster High School, among them: being such as Clarke County High, of Winchester, Versailles High, Lexington Model High as well as Lexington Senior High of Lexington and by bringing such teams as this to Lancaster the local squad is deserving of all the credit that the lovers of foot ball can possibly give them, then too, there is still another good view point and that is even with such prospects as we have here it is not costing the Lancaster School one cent to carry on this great little team, which is unquestionably one of the best in Central Kentucky.

The coaches are all gracie men, the uniforms and foot ball, together with the other equipment are furnished by the many patrons who pay the small sum of fifty cents to see such games as these, whereas the few times that Lancaster High plays away from home the run from 75cts. to one dollar.

Practically every team that the local eleven go up against have an employed coach, one who gives his entire time to coaching, and from the students standpoint, he must be at school on time, he must behave himself upon reaching school and he must bring up his lessons in order that he may be able to play on his team.

On tomorrow (Friday), Captain Cox will lead his warriors in the direction of Versailles and already about one dozen cars have promised to be on the Square to take over a load. Let's all go over and assist Captain Cox to his third blue string on his list.

Drastic Injunction Made Permanent

Federal Judge Says R. R. Employees Cannot Prevent Operation of Roads

Chicago, Sept. 23.—Federal Judge James Wilkerson today granted Attorney General Daugherty's petition for a nation wide injunction against the striking railway shopmen. In a lengthy review of the case he said the defendants could not deny knowledge and responsibility for the widespread violence which marked the strike.

The partial settlement of the strike, he held, had not affected the right of the government to obtain a nation-wide injunction.

The court gave attorneys for the defense until Monday morning to study the decision and prepare to argue the text of the injunction order which will be signed. Daugherty today presented the government's draft which is even more drastic than the restraining order now in force. The order will affect 400,000 members of the six crafts belonging to the railway employees' department of the American Federation of Labor.

Estes—Niemann

The home of the Baptist pastor in Lancaster, Ky., was the scene of a pretty wedding last Thursday morning, September 21st, when Miss Sabra Lee Estes, of Waco, Ky., became the bride of Mr. Erhart C. Nieman, of Reidsburg, Wis. The groom is a veteran of the late war and a mechanic by trade. The bride is an estimable young lady, well known and popular among a large circle of friends in her home community and in this vicinity as well. The marriage is the outcome of an interesting romance of acquaintance formed during war days. The groom is a splendid young man of high standing in his home town, but has shown his preference for Southern folks and the happy Southland by choosing his bride from among Kentucky's fair daughters, and is taking up his abode as a near neighbor at Crab Orchard. Their many friends both north and south will join in extending best wishes and hearty congratulations to the happy couple in their new home.

Boston Girl Reaches Edmonton on 5-Year Hike: has Crossed America

Edmonton, Alberta.—With hobbed hair, cowboy hat, khaki breeches and all her marching kit in a bag over her shoulders, Miss Neil Walker of Boston, Mass., has reached Edmonton, Alberta, after 14 months of walking in a round-the-world tour that is expected to last five years in all.

Miss Walker was ordered to take to the open road by her physician, as a cure for broken health. She liked the experience so well that she is going on right around the world, making her way by her own earnings, lecturing, selling picture cards, etc. She has already crossed America, and as since walked over to Canadian Rockies from Vancouver to Calgary, whence she jumped north to Edmonton. She is now nearing Regina, capital city of Saskatchewan, on the prairie, and hopes to get into the wooded country of the east before the winter cold takes the prairie lands into its icy grip.

Miss Walker has had some strange and exciting experiences. In Louisiana she was caught in a cloudburst while miles away from any habitation, and in California a rattler shared her camp bed for the whole of a night, but she says "it's a great life, all the same."

Baptist Church News

Our revival services closed Sunday night after twelve days of spiritual and constructive ministry by Brother Martin. The interest was deep, and increased with every service. The messages from night to night presented the Gospel in its simplicity and in the power of the Spirit. The morning services were seasons of spiritual refreshment and inspiration to all who were in attendance. The permanency of the work will manifest itself in a quickened church life and an increased determination on the part of the members to seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness in every relationship of life.

The regular business meeting of the church will be held on Saturday, October 7th, when business of importance will be considered. All members are urged to be present. An election of all officers of the church, except the deacons, will take place, and it is important that every member should attend.

The services will be at the regular hours next Sunday, with preaching by the pastor morning and evening. Do not forget that Sunday School now begins at 9:45 and the Junior B. Y. P. U. at 6 P. M., followed by preaching at 7 o'clock.

Following the services next Sunday morning there will be a business meeting at the church to extend the pastoral call for the ensuing year. Every member who believes in prayer should be present to vote, and every member who expects to vote should come in the spirit of prayer.

We earnestly invite all Baptists in this community to place their membership with us, or to come on confession of faith. We quote Isaiah 55:7 as a scriptural reason for every unsaved person coming to Christ now. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God for He will abundantly pardon."

Favors Barkley

Many of the Eighth District papers are coming out strong for Hon. A. W. Barkley for the democratic nomination for Governor.

In this connection the Jessamine Journal says:

It looks as though now that Congressman A. W. Barkley, of Paducah, will be a candidate for governor. He is one of the most substantial men in the state and has the right material in him for a chief executive.

COLT SHOW

Attracts Much Attention Last Monday

Eight splendid colts, sired by J. C. Gastineau's famous walking stallion, were shown in Lancaster last Monday and attracted unusual attention, for many were heard to say, they were the best lot of colts ever seen together in Lancaster. Mr. Gastineau had advertised to give $15.00 in prizes to the three best colts, which naturally brought out some keen competition. Mr. Perry Ingram, of Hoyle, and Thomas Hill of this county were selected to judge the entries and their decision gave universal satisfaction. Both are splendid judges, Mr. Hill being considered one of the best in Garrard county.

Both judges were warm in their praise of the quality of the colts entered and said that a better exhibit was seldom seen in a fair ring.

This speaks well for the famous sire, so well known throughout this and adjoining counties and it certainly makes the owner feel even more proud to own such a valuable stallion.

The first prize went to Foster Green, a nice sorrel filly; second prize to C. B. Ledford, another beautiful sorrel, while the third went to Millard Crisellia, a coking good black horse colt.

Fertilizer Used on One-Third of Kentucky Farms

Commercial fertilizers are being used on about one-third of the farms in Kentucky, according to R. E. Stephenson, soils and crops specialist of the College of Agriculture. From two to four million dollars worth is applied annually, about one-half this amount being used in 20 counties in the central-western part of the state where soils in general need phosphorus before they can produce the largest crop yields.

Probably the most economical fertilizer for Kentucky farmers to use on unlimed soils is a combination of rock phosphate and manure. When these two are properly used and legumes grown, it is not necessary for the farmer to purchase either nitrogen or potash for ordinary crops. Acid phosphate used in connection with limestone is the best treatment and is being used in larger quantities each year. This is due to the fact that most soils in the state are acid and cannot give the best results until they are limed. Acid phosphate usually gives better results than rock phosphate on limed soils. Many farmers are using acid phosphate for the benefit of all their soils and adding limestone to get a stand of some legume crop which in turn is depended upon to take nitrogen from the air and add it to the depleted soils. However, for truck crops and tobacco, a nitrogen fertilizer sometimes is purchased and used in connection with acid phosphate. Nitrate of soda and sulphate of ammonia are being used principally for this. Acid phosphate used with limestone is surpassed for quick results on sour soils. Basic slag phosphate also is meeting with considerable favor among farmers of the state. It is especially satisfactory for securing a stand of grass when limestone cannot be used.

October Best Month to Pick Breeding Hens

Within the next four or five weeks every farmer in Kentucky should select and mark the best hens in his poultry flock in order that these birds may be used in special breeding pens next spring, according to J. R. Smith, poultry extension specialist of the College of Agriculture. Many farmers who keep poultry as a sideline as well as scores of experienced poultry breeders in the state have found that the egg production of most any flock can be increased by selecting the highest producing birds in the flock and mating them with desirable males for the production of hatching eggs.

October is perhaps the best month for selecting such a pen since it is possible to pick out the high producing hens at that time of the year. Farmers who wait until spring to pick out their breeding hens will find that they are unable to distinguish easily between heavy layers and those that produce only a small number of eggs during the year. After the hens have been selected, they should be marked with leg bands or some other device in order that they may be recognized in the spring when the time for mating arrives.

Only those hens that are not moulting or those that have just started should be selected when the breeding hens are being picked in October. The yellow color also should be faded from the shanks and beaks of birds belonging to yellow-shanked breeds. Vigorous hens have a bright, clear, prominent eye with an eyelid that is free from fat usually will have many of the characteristics that are desirable in breeding hens. It is important that all hens selected for the breeding pen be laying at this time of the year. Soft, pliable pelvic bones that are wide apart and a soft pliable abdomen that has at least two and one-half fingers depth between the pelvic bones, and the end of the breast bone usually can be taken as an indication that the hen is still laying. No bird should be selected that is not a good representative of the breed. From 12 to 18 Latham hens should be picked for every rooster that will be used in the spring breeding and from 10 to 12 birds of other breeds.

GRAFIC STORY OF MEMORABLE NEW ORLEANS TRAGEDY

Noted French Surgeon Slays on the Street Man Who Hounded Him and is Exonerated.

Sad Fate Which Engulfed Physician

(By Clay Sutton)

In the early nineties a young French physician named Gustave Nordier was holding an important chair in a certain well-known medical school of New Orleans, where he had achieved considerable distinction in the treatment of nervous disorders and in brain surgery. He was a prepossessing man of thirty-four, scholarly, of resolute and dignified bearing and always dressed in clothes of the latest fashion. He was born near Paris. He had graduated brilliantly from a noted medical university of the French capital, and then, after an impetuous courtship, had married there a beautiful and accomplished parisienne whom he brought to the States and installed in luxurious apartments in this great southern city. The nuptial ceremony itself, however, which was performed in Paris, was concluded only after he had fought and vanquished in a bloody sword combat a formidable rival named Lucien Bouigny, an unscrupulous aspirant for the hand and fortune of the same woman, the challenge being the direct result of an unbearable insult, offered by Bouigny to his rival. After the fight Bouigny, who was a lawyer by profession, was carried half dead from the field to a hospital where he lay for months hovering between life and death; but he finally recovered completely. This savage collision had stirred the French capital profoundly.

Meanwhile Dr. and Madam Nordier, sadly embarrassed by the limelight of this sensation, had disguised themselves as peasants and suddenly disappeared from Paris. They sailed for the United States and, as already stated, were established in New Orleans, where the physician rapidly achieved success and fame along certain lines of his chosen profession.

Usually from the vortex of a supreme misfortune the distressed one is cast forth either refined and exalted on the one hand, or debased and misanthropic on the other.

Bouigny had emerged from this gulf with an immense and sinister resentment. A glacial cruelty benumbed his chest. He was cut to the quick by the collapse of his matrimonial ambitions as well as by his dramatic overthrow on the field of honor. He thirsted for revenge. He had suffered long and cruelly, but now, once more restored to the full vigor of health, he determined upon the destruction of the man who had heaped upon him these misfortunes.

He accordingly supplied himself with money, and in possession of a certain vague elow which led him to suspect that Dr. Nordier had secluded himself in New Orleans, Bouigny embarked for that place, where he at once began a systematic search of the city for his former antagonist. It seems, however, that Dr. Nordier had received confidential information of these developments and had armed himself.

From day to day along the streets of the busy city Bouigny slowly passed, his eyes glowing with the baleful light of evil passions in restraint as he peered into the faces of those who thronged the boulevards. Thus the days passed into weeks. A fixed idea not infrequently leads to some form of madness. Bouigny was obsessed with the terrible dementia of revenge; his nobler instincts had capitulated to it. The scientific study of crime has shown that certain obliquities of the mind blaze the way to deeds of violence, hence it is not surprising that this unrelenting and stealthy conspirator fully believed that his vigilance would lead with absolute precision to an avenging climax.

It was on a cold gray day in January that the figure of a man, erect, immaculate, of confident bearing, whose slender cane tapped with rhythmic regularity the resounding flagstones as he strode along the sidewalk, suddenly loomed upon the startled gaze of Bouigny. At last he was looking again upon the man whose flashing sword, not so long ago, had caused his very life blood to spurt in torrents as he fell before its murderous lunges. The physician did not see his lurking foe. He passed on. For a moment Bouigny seemed petrified. But he recovered almost instantly, and, gripping with trembling fingers the handle of a concealed revolver, stepped behind the doctor and stalked him along the street, which was crowded with pedestrians. A frightful joy flamed in his somber soul as he glared fixedly at the majestic figure of his former adversary. Now and then a passer-by would turn and eye him curiously, ly, apparently thinking him some insensible somnambulist driven before the unreal tempest of a sinister dream. Dr. Nordier was nearing his home. Bouigny's resolve was taken. Suddenly he drew his pistol from its concealment, but just at this moment Dr. Nordier turned abruptly and, rapidly ascending the steps of his residence, entered his home. A muttered oath burst from Bouigny's lips as he crouched for a moment in a doorway. Some passers-by, thinking to forestall the act of a seeming mad man, reached forth hands to seize his pistol, but he knocked them aside and, leaping up the steps of the Nordier mansion like a tiger, he bounded thru the open doorway into the hall behind the physician. Almost immediately his revolver exploded twice in quick succession, one of the bullets grazing Nordier's head. The other went wild.

A woman's screams were heard; then Nordier's heavier gun barked hoarsely. A moment later Bouigny, his face blanched with terror, rushed wildly out of the street entrance with his right arm dangling and blood streaming from his sleeve. The member was fractured. He had dropped his revolver. A heavy explosion again reverberated in the hall and splinters flew from the woodwork of the doorway. The shot missed. A moment afterwards Dr. Nordier, flaming with volcanic fury, hurled himself toward the hall entrance and again leveled his gleaming revolver. A cry was heard, but before the frantic fugitive had covered five paces along the sidewalk Nordier's revolver boomed with a terrific detonation and Bouigny pitched forward on his face to the pavement with blood pouring from his open mouth. Some one ran forward and gently pulled the prostrate form over until the face could be seen. A look was sufficient. The bullet had entered his body near the left armpit causing a mortal wound. He never once moved or spoke. A thrill of horror ran thru the throng attracted to the spot as the words, "He is dead" passed from one to another. At this juncture a fair but agitated face, seen for a moment at a window of the Nordier mansion, was withdrawn from view. Dr. Nordier, still clutching his smoking revolver, turned upon his heel and re-entered his home. The door closed behind him. This terrible tragedy threw the city into a fever of excitement. A few days later the physician was duly arraigned and tried in the City Court, a procedure which was purely formal, since it was inevitable from the outset that he would be acquitted and discharged from custody. And when this occurred a demonstration of approval broke out in the crowded courtroom which is said to have been without a parallel in the administration of jurisprudence in the courts of the South.

Altho Dr. Nordier went forth a free man, this tragic misfortune soon wrought in him a melancholy change. Something in the soul of every man shrinks aghast from the taking of human life. And when this is done, even in aggravated conditions, a stalking specter frequently rises on the horizon of the slayer's mind as a menace to his happiness. Dr. Nordier was pursued by this strange and terrible phantom. He fell into a state of gloomy anxiety and, in order to induce forgetfulness and drive from his mind the haunting shadow, he began the immoderate use of cocaine, a highly exciting alkaloid not extensively used at that time except by medical men of scientific attainments.

The fine intuitive perception of Madam Nordier was not at fault in the interpretation she gave to the strange moods of the physician. Searching closely those gloomy eyes, she had caught certain terrifying glimpses of that steep moral declivity down whose slopes this splendid man was slipping towards the dense shadows of a lethal night. Her futile efforts to arrest his fatal descent were sad indeed. Henceforth she was condemned to tread a pathway strewn with the wreckage of forsaken ideals and of hopes prostrate and abandoned. Such was the undesired sentence which she received uncomplainingly from the pitiless hand of destiny.

The cocaine vice is modern. Once fixed on a person its work is sure and deadly. Its insidious encroachment precedes hallucinations and mental enchainment. Pallor, emaciation, tremors—these foreshadow a slow dissolution. Down these appalling steep, wholly unheeded of the efforts made for his rescue, stumbled

This Statue of Liberty is emblematical of freedom for everyone who does what is right; but it does not stand for license to do wrong.

You are at liberty to do what you choose with your money—but are you doing what is right?

The wrong thing to do is to carry it about with you, sequester it in some hiding spot, leave it in your safe, or put it in a safe deposit box.

The right thing to do is to put it in this bank, to be used at your convenience, to draw interest if it is a surplus, and to circulate in the marts of trade.

Old Henry's Wooing

By JUSTIN WENTWOOD

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union

"Hello, Hank! Saving up to get married?"

Old Henry Dobson, who had been one of the bookkeepers of the friend company for nearly a score of years, looked up sheepishly and thrust away the bills he was counting.

"Better hurry up; not much time to lose, Hank!"

Henry Dobson must have been fifty, and why he had been so long with the company and still retained a subordinate position was not difficult to see. Honest, plodding, industrious, he had not the qualities that make for success. An elderly-looking man, unobtrusive, he went his way, the butt of mild witticisms on the part of the younger men.

No one knew anything about old Henry, nor where he lived, and nobody cared.

The same applied equally to Miss Howell, of the correspondence department. Miss Howell had been there nine years, and looked just a plain, pale, rather faded old maid.

"Say, Miss Howell, Hank Dobson reckons he's going to get married!"

Sadie, the telephone girl, said this, and waited for the quick blush to appear on Miss Howell's face.

"Is he, really? Oh, isn't that nice!"

"Say," said Sadie to her friend, Agnes Strutt, "wouldn't it be a joke to make Amy Howell think Hank Dobson's in love with her?"

"And to make him think she's in love with him?"

"How'll we do it?"

"Watch me!" said Sadie cryptically. On the following morning Miss Howell found a neat little bunch of violets on her desk, with a scrap of postcard attached, bearing in writing the words, "With H. D.'s compliments."

Her agitation appeared plain. The girls, watching her, had many quiet giggles as they saw her surreptitiously bend to sniff the fragrance of the flowers.

"Say, Hank, that's a fine bunch of flowers you sent Miss Howell!"

"I didn't send her any flowers. What'd I want to send her flowers for?" protested Henry Dobson.

"Well, don't you let on you didn't. She's coming to thank you."

Little Miss Howell stopped at Henry Dobson's desk. "Thank you so much for your beautiful flowers, Mr. Dobson," she said in a quiet voice.

A few days later Henry Dobson found a pair of socks on his desk, bearing a card, "With kind remembrances from A. R." Examination disclosed the fact that the heels were gone.

"Say, Miss Howell, Mr. Dobson's had such a lovely pair of socks from some one," said Sadie.

Little Miss Howell raised her head inquiringly. "Who sent them?" she asked.

"Oh, Miss Howell! Oh, Miss Howell!" they teased her.

It was funny to see how nervously Miss Howell avoided Henry Dobson's desk for several days thereafter.

The cream of the joke came a few days later. Miss Howell opened a little cardboard box. Inside was a ten-years-old valentine, procured from some old dealer who had had it rotting on his shelf since the days when valentines remained in fashion. The lace paper edge was torn and milled. The picture represented an elderly spinster with a long, red nose, and underneath was printed:

I think you're out for marriage. As all the world can see. I hope you'll find a man to your mind. As long as it isn't me.

The sender had scratched out the last word and substituted "H. D."

Miss Howell's right hand jerked convulsively. The valentine, torn in half, dropped into the wastebasket.

Twelve struck. Hank Dobson came slowly into the correspondence department as the girls were getting on their hats. Miss Howell rose up, smiling.

"Oh, Sadie, you know I'm not coming back on Monday?" she asked.

"Not coming back, Miss Howell?" There was genuine regret. "Then, impulsively: 'Oh, Miss Howell, if it because we've bothered you so much, won't you overlook it? I'm really ashamed!'"

"My dear, you haven't bothered me at all," Miss Howell smiled. "But my husband and I are starting a little poultry farm—the dream of our lives—"

"Oh, Miss Howell! I mean—why, Miss Howell, you and Mr. Dobson have got married!"

"Ten years ago, my dear," smiled Amy Howell.

The First Wallpaper in America.

Wall papers did not begin to come into this country until the second quarter of the eighteenth century. Even then they were specially ordered by the individual householders from their dealers in London and Paris rather than carried from the general retail trade. Thomas Hancock, for instance, ordered in 1737, a specially made paper from his stationer, Thomas Rowe of London, and in his letter giving the order speaks of another paper similarly imported by a friend of his, three or four years earlier. By 1745, however, wall paper was in retail stock here, Charles Hargrave of Philadelphia advertising it in that year. But certainly it was not in general use until 1750. By that time it had become enormously popular and a host of merchants in all the larger towns were advertising new importations with the arrival of every ship.—Phyllis Ackerman in Arts and Decorations

ASSESSOR'S FIGURES AID EXTENSION WORK

Useful to Determine County's Big Farm Problems.

In One Instance It Was Discovered That 51 Per Cent of Land Was Farmed by Tenants—Federal Farm Loan Unknown.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture)

In making county and community programs of demonstrations and other extension activities for the year, extension agents in Oklahoma report to the United States Department of Agriculture that the use of county census and assessor's figures as a basis for determining the county's major agricultural problems is proving very successful. A meeting of the men and women from each community is called each year by the county agricultural agent for the purpose of making a program for the year's extension work.

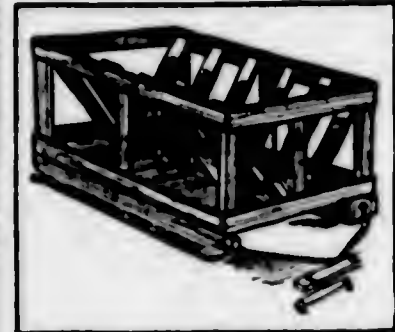

In these meetings it has been found that these figures are of great service in showing agricultural conditions of the county in a concise and comprehensive way. In one instance it was found that about 51 per cent of the county's agricultural land was farmed by tenants. Discussion brought out the fact that the federal farm loan was practically unknown in the county and plans were made to conduct a campaign to bring the benefits of the loan to the attention of the community as a possible means of securing a greater percentage of farm ownership.

Figures showing that more acres in the county were being planted to wheat than any other crop started a discussion which indicated there was difference of opinion as to the best variety for the locality. It was therefore decided that demonstration plots of the best-liked varieties of this crop be grown in eight sections of the county. In a similar way all the figures covering the agricultural activities of the county are studied in these program-making meetings, and as a result a program is made which is based on what statistics have shown to be the most urgent needs of the community and in which general interest throughout the county is felt.

HARVEST CLOVER SEED CROP

Under normal conditions clover should be cut when the heads have turned a dark brown. If the clover is a little overripe, the loss of the heads may be materially reduced by cutting early in the morning or in the evening when there is dew. The clover should be cut as high as possible; this enables threshing to be speeded up, as there will be less straw to handle.

Where Extra Service is Demanded Firestone Cords Predominate

WHEREVER the exacting and tests of tires are most severe—there you will find Firestone Cords in universal use.

The hard jobs seek Firestone. And so well has Firestone responded under difficult conditions—so consistently has mileage mounted to totals impossible to obtain from ordinary tires that today Most Miles per Dollar is the buying slogan of thinking motorists everywhere.

The blending and tempering of rubber, gum-dipped cord construction, air-bag cure—all these mileage methods have been developed by men whose life work is the production of constantly increasing tire values for the public.

Users in this vicinity verify Firestone reputation, and report almost daily some new Firestone record of extra distance travelled.

Don't be satisfied to buy tires—buy values—the longest mileage at the lowest price consistent with such reliable performance.

Make Most Miles per Dollar your principle of tire economy—choose your next tire on that basis.

Restraint Leaf Strains Reduce Root Rot Damage

Root rot of tobacco, which causes Kentucky growers heavy losses each year, can be checked by the use of disease-resistant strains of leaf, according to results obtained during the summer just past by 46 Fayette county farmers who co-operated with County Agent W. R. Galtbert and the extension division of the College of Agriculture in growing resistant strains of burley by the side of common varieties on their farms. Results obtained by the Fayette county farmers are in line with those being obtained by more than 250 farmers scattered over the burley and dark tobacco sections of the state who also conducted similar demonstrations. More than 80 per cent of the 46 Fayette county demonstrators have shown their confidence in the resistant varieties by saving seed from them for next year's plantings.

In many of the Fayette demonstrations, the resistant varieties not only made a more rapid growth than the common varieties but also were more uniform. In each of the demonstrations, the resistant and common varieties were grown side by side on the same field and given the same treatment.

In 26 out of the 43 cases, plants from the resistant strains averaged from four to 12 inches taller than those from common varieties while the common variety made the fastest growth in two cases. There was no noticeable difference in the rate of growth in 21 of the demonstrations. Plants from resistant varieties showed more uniformity than those from the common varieties in 18 of the demonstrations while the variety commonly grown showed most uniformity in two cases. Twenty-six of the demonstrations failed to reveal any difference in the uniformity of the two types. However, it was found that where no difference could be noted in the rate of growth and uniformity of the two types that the demonstrations were conducted on either new blue grass sod or ground that had been in grass, clover or timothy for several years. In each of these cases, observations indicated that the soil was not infested with root rot. This finding was in line with the fact that root rot is most apt to be present in soils where tobacco has been grown for two or more years in succession.

Seven Events to Affect Prices of Farm Produce

Markets for farm products, especially poultry, will be affected to a considerable extent during the remainder of the present year by at least seven important holidays, according to O. B. Jeames, head of the section of markets of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station. While Thanksgiving and Christmas are the two most important events, various others, especially Jewish holidays days of which there are several during the coming few months, are expected to have an important effect on the markets for certain products. New York City is the leading live poultry market of the country with the result that prices received by farmers in this state will be influenced to a considerable extent by the demands of market in that city.

Day of Atonement is the nearest holiday of any consequence, this one being celebrated October 2nd. All prime stock, especially White Leghorn chickens and roosters, are in demand for this event. September 26 to 29th include the best New York marketing days for products in demand for this holiday. Feast of Tabernacles, which will be celebrated four days later, October 6th, will create a demand for ducks, fowls and fat geese. The best New York market days for products in demand for this holiday are October 2 to 4th.

Columbus Day, which will be celebrated October 12th, will create a demand for live chickens, fowls and rabbits. The best market days in New York for these commodities are October 9 to 11th. Turkeys, geese, fowls, capons, sucking pigs and rabbits will be in demand for Thanksgiving Day which will be celebrated November 30th. The best New York market days for these commodities are from November 22 to 28th.

Prime quality products of all kinds will be in demand December 15th, at which time the Feast of Law will be celebrated. December 11th, to 13th include the best New York market days for these commodities. Christmas Day, December 25th, will bring about a demand for turkeys, geese, fowls, capons, sucking pigs, live rabbits and live goats. The best market days in New York for these commodities come between December 19th and 22nd. The same commodities that will be in demand at Christmas will be in demand for New Year's Day, January 1st. The best New York market days for commodities in demand for this event usually come between December 26th and 29th.

Not Like Other Girls

By CLARA DELAFIELD

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union

I wonder, I wonder so much. And there's nobody can tell except Elsie Edith Middleton now—and she won't. Not that I've ever asked her. I wouldn't dare to do that. No one could take liberties with Elsie. You see, she never was like other girls. There's a sort of true majesty among girls, just as there is among married women, and among men, of course. But Elsie always ran by herself. That's what rather put the girls against her.

I remember when she left college she adopted a sort of highbrow attitude toward life. Instead of going about with the young fellows, she'd be off to a nook with a study book—I mean, off to a study nook with a book, poetry usually. And there she'd sit, wrapped in meditation fancy free, and listening to the other girls having a good time with the boys.

I wonder, I wonder if Elsie really liked it. She never wanted anything to do with the men. She said love was a sacred thing, and came once only in a lifetime, and if you didn't find your love returned you just kept quiet about it, and went on holding yourself in as long as you lived, until you either died or pined away.

I remember young Rowell. He was a queer, poetical sort of chap, with a faraway look in his eyes, and when he was staying here one summer—it must have been five years ago—he and Elsie just naturally gravitated toward each other. They'd saunter off together into the shade of the old apple tree and sit there with their books in their hands. First young Rowell would read a bit and then Elsie'd read a bit—and all the time the other young folks were enjoying themselves in a beautiful, natural way in hammocks, and walking off in pairs, and being driving.

Well, what naturally happened? Florence Keith came down for the week. She was a tuffy little thing, full of spirits, and she hadn't been here a day before she fixed young Rowell with her basilian stare. Next day, when Elsie wandered off with her book, young Rowell didn't turn up. He'd taken Florence off to see the hermit in his cave—Joe Briggs, who works winters in the boiler factory. And all that week Elsie was left alone and at the week-end young Rowell saw Miss Keith on the train as far as Philadelphia, and then went on his own way.

Marry? No, nothing but a summer flirtation, of course. Maybe Elsie wasn't mad. She didn't eat hardly anything the rest of her stay here, and she used to moan more than ever and read her love poems to herself under the apple tree.

You know, the same crowd comes down here pretty regular year after year. Next year Elsie was just the same, only a little more so. She wouldn't have a thing to do with the young men, and Florence had things all her own way. Young Rowell? Oh, he'd gone West. Yes, he married a rancher's daughter out in Utah. He doesn't appear north in the story.

"For the lord's sake, Elsie, why don't you make up to some of the young fellows?" I asked her. I think it was the year after that. "You're good-looking, and you can be bright when you want to. What'd you want to scare 'em off for? They don't want a highbrow. Why, the sight of those books of yours puts the lid on your chances."

"I'll never forget how Elsie looked at me and answered: 'Tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all.'"

I hadn't a thing to say to that, and I let her keep on loving next year, and the next. The fifth year little Florence Keith met her fate. She'd played with the boys' hearts as long, it was high time she got caught herself. Young Middleton was the son of the banker of Boston—ever hear of him? Worth a few cool millions, but nothing like what some of those bankers have got. Still, he was a good catch, and the odd thing was, Florence really was crazy over him.

And there was Elsie with her study book—I mean her book and her study nook, and—next thing that happened was when Florence and Middleton had had a little tiff. I was walking along the creek, and who should I see but Middleton and Elsie, sitting side by side staring into the pool.

"I shall never love again," I heard Elsie say in her wisest way. "True life—one love. Ah me! 'Tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all.'"

I turned and raced back. "Florence, for the love of Mike get your hooks into him," I gasped. "Elsie Davis is out for battle."

It was too late. Well, what could you expect? They were engaged by supper time, eloped that night, and were married next morning over the state line.

Size of an Atom.

During a lecture delivered before the Royal Society in London Sir Oliver Lodge gave a striking illustration of the incredible minuteness of the atom. The amount of gold in sea water, although very small, seems considerable when stated in atoms, for a single drop of sea water contains 50,000,000 atoms of gold. That stupendous figure, however, indicates merely one-fiftieth of a grain in a ton of sea water, and it would take 100,000,000 atoms to be visible under a microscope of the highest power.

DEMOCRATIC TICKET FOR CONGRESS
HON. RALPH GILBERT

We wouldn't be bothered so much with bad roads if we were more prompt in repairing them when they first begin to go to pieces.

If you dip a saw into a pail of water and wipe it off thoroughly afterward, no harm will be done. But if the dampness is allowed to remain a few hours the saw will be a mass of rust.

Saws do not cost much, but we are careful to keep them free from rust.

Roads cost many thousands of dollars, and we allow them to become ruined from neglect.

Can you supply a satisfactory reason for such marvelous inconsistency?

Make home attractive for the children and they will not hunger for the attractions of the street.

Children are not interested in market quotations, or political discussions, or the latest morsel of scandal. They require diversions suitable to their age, and when these diversions are not to be had in the home their minds naturally turn to where they are to be found.

Parents who understand this have little difficulty in controlling their children and making them a credit to the community.

There are lots of soft snags in this world, but they seldom come to people who are looking for them.

The young man who starts out to hunt them generally dies an old man who failed to find them.

Honesty, thrift and perseverance will produce them in time, but an eternity of mere seeking will be of no avail.

When you find a man whom dogs and cats instinctively avoid he is invariably a person you will do well to avoid yourself.

Dogs and cats understand human nature about as well as some of us mortals know it. They respond quickly to kindness, and are extremely sensitive to brutality. The claws under the polished human surface are not easily concealed from them.

Keep your eye on the dog, and you will soon get the number of its master.

If a lion cub becomes unruly the mother lioness does not mince matters. She administers prompt punishment by a swipe with one of her paws.

Some people could take a leaf from the lion's book with profit to themselves and to their children.

But they don't, and the child pays for its mollycoddling long before it reaches maturity.

The lioness knows, remembers, and acts.

Many humans know, forget, and later repent.

And still, we wouldn't care to be a beast, though their intelligence does at times appear to be superior to ours.

Mr. Hoover has talked much of preventing profiteering in coal this winter. The people listened, and wondered if he really meant what he said.

Now it is up to Mr. Hoover—hang up against him.

If he climbs up into the skies, gets a firm grip upon coal prices, and jerks them back to earth again, we will believe that he is a man of truth.

But if he does not—well, he won't be the first man who has bluffed his way through a sea of political and profiteering filth.

The people are looking your way, Mr. Hoover.

Will you make good, or have you been making a bluff?

No Such Animal

Periodically some one starts out to investigate marketing conditions with a view to applying corrective measures. And just as periodically that same one is sidetracked or choked off by the profiteering "interests" involved.

Everybody knows that we are sorely in need of a better method of getting the products of our farms to the tables of the actual consumers.

Everybody expects that some day this problem will be solved, but few people hope to live to see that day.

A great avalanche of snow rushing down a steep mountain side cannot be checked in its destructive course until it expends its force upon more even ground.

The profiteering "interests," those human leeches who are sweeping the country from end to end and from side to side, are just as destructive in their relentless power, and will not be stayed until barred by death or prison doors.

Find the man who can find the way, and we may hope for ultimate relief.

But he must first be born and reared to man's estate. There's no such animal now.

And So It Goes

Many of the ills afflicting humanity are unnecessary and could be avoided.

Procrastination is their greatest friend.

When we feel out of sorts, or off our feet, it is a warning that our system is not functioning as nature intended it should.

Right then is the time to apply corrective measures. But that is what most of us fail to do. We dally along, hoping that it will wear itself out, and in the end the doctor does the work that nature should do with but slight assistance from us.

But, then, doctors must earn fees in order to live, and some one must pay those fees.

If we are neglectful of ourselves, we are at least good to the dogs.

And so it goes.

Here It Is Again

Is it to be another general European war?

It looks like it.

The Turk wants his capitol city back again, or he wants a fight.

The allies don't want him to have the territory of which they deprived him, and at the same time they dread another world conflagration.

If it comes to a finish fight, Turkey can reasonably expect aid from Russia, and in such an event the allies would be facing a hostile army of five or six millions trained and seasoned veterans, hungry for slaughter and plunder. And none of this vast horde have any particular regard for the human side of modern warfare.

Temporary arrangements may suspend hostilities for a time, but in the end only resort to arms can effect a final and lasting adjustment of the European and far eastern situations.

Seldom does a smoldering fire fail to break out fresh and consume the fuel at hand.

It All Depends

When you form an opinion, how long does it last? That depends upon the thoroughness with which you have analyzed your subject.

Hasty impressions only last until the truth becomes known, and the truth is only to be determined by first uncovering the facts in the case.

Dig into the fountain of knowledge, as well as into the soil. You will learn more and make fewer mistakes.

Memorial

The beautiful lines of Robert Browning given below come to us with great comfort as we mourn the passing away of "Granny Hogan."

CONNECTIONAL

Life changeth all our thoughts of Heaven;

At first we think of streets of gold, Of gates of pearl, and dazzling lights.

Of shining wings and robes of white, And things all strange to mortal sight.

But in the afterwards of years, It is a more familiar place.

A home unmet by sight or tears, Where waiteth many a well known face.

With passing months, it comes more near.

It grows more real, day by day; Not strange or cold, but very dear.

The glad home land not far away, Where none are sick, or poor, or lone.

The place where we shall find our own.

And we think of all we know Who there have met, to part no more.

Our longing hearts desire home, too.

With all the strife and trouble o'er

Contributed by Eliza M. Bon, Bryantsville, Ky.

In Memory

In loving remembrance of our dear father, Mr. P. G. Gooch, who died Sept. 24th, 1921:

One year has come and gone since we saw you, father dear, gone but not forgotten by wife and children.

The golden gates were open, A gentle voice said come, And with farewell he left us.

He calmly entered home, Mrs. P. G. Gooch and children.

Pie Supper

There will be a pie supper at the Beasley School House Friday night, Sept. 29th, at 7:30. Everybody invited.

Japanese Term "Shogun"

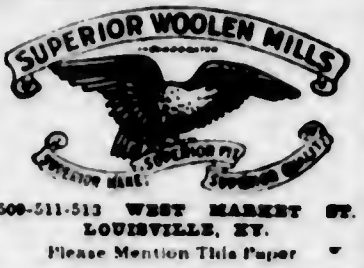

"Shogun" is a Japanese term of great command, or command-in-chief. For several centuries the shogun has exercised the real power in Japan, though nominally the emperor is the emperor. However, in 1867 a revolution restored the power of the emperor and the title of shogun was abolished the following year.

Bletheroe's Romance

By CLARA DELAFIELD

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union

"Tell that to the Looenant," said the cop, as he took old Bletheroe into the station house. "Looenant, I found this man loitering in Willett avenue at two this morning, with apparent felonious intent."

"How about it? Take his pedigree, sergeant! Now, what have you got to say?"

"It's a long story," mumbled Bletheroe. "I—I—see—"

"You can sit there, Jurgens, you might as well telephone Mr. Hansard to step round. He looks pretty sick to me; can't risk another death happening in the cells. Now, Bletheroe!"

It was an extraordinary story Bletheroe, the aged wanderer, told, and it began forty years before, apparently, when he was a young clerk in a ship-ping house. He'd strolled down to the docks every lunch hour, looking at the ships, and wishing he had the pluck to take passage on one. That was his dominant idea, and he'd saved up three hundred dollars.

But then there was a girl he was getting fond of, and he didn't know what to do. He had a shrewd suspicion that what she wanted was an apartment with golden oak furniture. So he was troubled.

He was riding home one day on a car when there was a disturbance. A passenger had gone raving mad. His wrists were covered with little scars, and he was jabbing a strange sort of needle about.

"Your turn!" he hissed, and staided Bletheroe in the arm.

It was only a puncture. The man was thrown off, but the hypodermic seemed to have made another man of Bletheroe. He stopped the car and walked for sheer exuberance. He had been a fool to stay on with Jenkins when Romance beckoned.

He saw an attractive girl in the street and knew at once that she was for him.

He stopped her. "My name's Bletheroe," he said. "I'm sailing for Cuba in the morning. Will you marry me tonight? (that was before the days of license laws) 'and come with me. We can find a minister easy."

She stared at him in terror. "It's like an answer from heaven!" she replied. "How did you know?"

"Know what?" asked Bletheroe. "That I'm getting married tonight, and that I hate him. We quarrelled only this morning, and he swore he wouldn't appear."

"I tell you what," said Bletheroe. "I'll come home with you, and if he doesn't appear, marry me instead."

"You're the strangest man I ever met," whispered the girl.

"Acquaintance comes after marriage, my dear," said Bletheroe.

They got on a car again and rode, rode uptown into a block of houses that all looked exactly alike. Of course there were no apartment houses up there then, but here were these rows of little houses stretching away and away.

They stopped at one and went in. An old man and a minister were in the parlor.

"Where's Jack?" asked the girl.

"Late, darn him!" said the old man.

"I love this gentleman, and if Jack doesn't appear I'm going to marry him instead. I'll give Jack ten minutes more."

"It's all one to me. You always was a headstrong gal," said the old man.

Ten minutes passed, and, as there was no Jack, Bletheroe and the girl stood up before the minister. He went slow, in case Jack came before the crisis of the service, but no Jack. And they departed man and wife, and walked and walked, happy as larks together.

Suddenly the girl stopped. "I forgot my suitcase!" she cried.

"You don't want it, darling?"

"I do, I tell you. It's got my thing in it. How can I sell for wherever it is without them?"

"Don't be long, darling," said Bletheroe.

The girl started off at a run, and Bletheroe waited and waited. One hour went by—two hours. Then Bletheroe went back and began to search for the house. But they were all the same.

"You never found her?" asked the doctor, who had come in.

"They wouldn't let her out again. She's there, somewhere—and I've been looking for her—my wife—these forty years."

The doctor felt his pulse and whispered to the lieutenant.

"It's Bletheroe he wants, not the cells, lieutenant. I guessed it when he spun that yarn about the hypodermic. It's morphine poisoning; look at his wrists!"

Japanese Mushroom Culture.

During a visit paid by the prince of Wales to the people of Japan, he manifested keen interest in their unique methods of mushroom culture.

Trees of huge growth, which have adorned the forests for many decades, are cut down and allowed to lie for a year or two. Large holes are then bored into the tree trunks, and spawn inserted therein.

Under such conditions they produce practically a continuous crop, and grow with a "mushroom growth rapidity." To anyone familiar with the somewhat crude methods of producing mushrooms in tunnels and other dark recesses, adopted in our own country, this system will readily suggest a better method of culture.

American Legion News

Prospective beneficiaries of the American Legion who plan to marry during the national convention of the ex-service men's organization in New Orleans, October 16 to 20th., will have the way paved for them by a member of the convention committee.

Announcement has been made that Theodore A. Silvera, chairman of the convention historical records committee, will marry Miss Helen Hauley Smith, also of New Orleans, in the presence of his Legion buddies assembled in convention hall.

A chaplain from one of the United States warships which are to be sent to New Orleans for the convention will be asked to perform the ceremony. Eighteen flower girls are being trained and a detachment of boy scouts will act as ushers.

Convention headquarters has received a number of inquiries in regard to the holding of marriages during the Legion gathering which have been answered with the statement that all facilities will be provided to assist the lovers. Twenty Legionnaires were married at the Legion convention in Kansas City last year.

The American Legion Weekly has just inaugurated a plan for distribution of the Weekly which will financially benefit Legion men and at the same time make the balance of the past larger. By acting as local distributing agents for the news stand sales of the Weekly a certain percentage of the total sales will go to the Legionnaire doing the distributing and to the post treasury. The news stand director of the Weekly has napped out a plan for placing the Legion's magazine on the news stands which has features no other magazine can offer. Under this plan post treasurers and post membership can work as a steady income. Write the news stand director at the Weekly. He'll tell you more about making money pockets bulge.

Resolutions against the employment by the government of women whose husbands also are drawing salaries from government agencies were passed at a recent meeting of George Washington post of the American Legion at Washington, D. C. The Legion post named thirteen women, among them Mrs. Caroline Harding Votaw, President Harding's sister. The Legion asserts Mrs. Votaw's husband holds the job of superintendent of prisons which pays $4,000 a year while she draws $5,000 as head of the industrial service section of the Veterans Bureau. The Legionnaires hold that one job in a family is enough and that the women's places should be filled by former service men.

More than 2,200 sailors and 90 officers of the United States Navy will come to New Orleans during the American Legion national convention October 16 to 20th., as the result of a recent order made by Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt.

The naval men will come with a fleet of one cruiser and six destroyers ordered to New Orleans for the convention. The cruiser, Birmingham, flagship of Rear Admiral W. C. Cogh, who will command the fleet, has a normal quota of 1,000 men and 65 officers. The six destroyers that will accompany the Birmingham will have crews of 200 men and five officers each.

Hydroplanes ordered to fly to the convention from Pensacola, Fla., will include some of the largest models in existence. Their wing span measures 100 feet. All planes will be twin screw equipped with Liberty motors.

Arrangements have been made for the appearance at the convention of a band of 20 pieces from the naval training station at Pensacola.

According to a report received by the New Jersey American Legion State Senator Joseph E. Wallworth, of Camden will introduce a bill in the legislature to have the people vote on what shall be done with the unexpected balance of $800,000 left after paying the state bonus. The introduction of the bill is contingent on Gov. Edwards I. Edwards calling a special session of the legislature. The Legion seeks the special assembly in order that the fund may be used to build one or more hospitals for the care of sick and disabled world war veterans.

"And that's your business, seeking to ruin women's reputations for money?"

Thelma Norton, white-haired, her gray eyes blazing, confronted Alan Lesson in the office of the detective agency.

She was a magnificent woman, with the appearance of some queen of long ago. Tall, willowy, erect, she dominated the man, controlled him, for he was in the force of her personality.

Nevertheless, Lesson pulled himself together. "Madame is a legitimate profession, Mrs. Norton," he answered coolly.

"So is the spy's," she answered. "You are no better than a spy, the lowest, meanest thing that ever crawled upon the face of the earth."

Alan Lesson bit his lip. His eyes fell. He knew that it was true. "This rank is my husband paying you for this wonderful discovery that before I married him I had what is commonly called a 'past'?"

Lesson might have rejoined that he had a reputation of a hundred dollars a day, with twenty-five thousand more to be paid upon discovery of evidence which would enable him to obtain a divorce. And he might have said that in fact he was going to say that he had won the house.

"That is part of my private business, Mrs. Norton," he returned.

"And you think it legitimate?"

"Was it legitimate on your part to behave as you have done, morally speaking?"

"I can't discuss my affairs with you. I shall put up the hardest fight possible. You know what sort of creature has tried to spy on me—a man from whom I would separate myself as soon as possible if it were not for my child. You know his reputation?"

"No, Mrs. Norton. I am not tried to inquire into your husband's reputation."

You know why he has suddenly become so eager to discover certain facts? You know that he is in the clutches of a certain mysterious woman, and is anxious to marry her."

"It may be possible, but I assure you it is not my affair. I cannot discuss my employers' business," said the private detective.

"And how does he propose to obtain his divorce on the ground that I had 'this past'?"

"Your former husband, Mrs. Norton, is lying."

An incredulous cry escaped her. "Lying?" She clasped her hands together. "Oh, surely—surely you are deceiving me, Mr. Lesson. He died only a year ago, before I married Mr. Norton under my maiden name."

Unfortunately, he did not. When your husband placed the matter in my hands I discovered, rather by accident, that James Hammerley's death was faked, for the purpose of enabling him to escape the attentions of the police. His international coup had netted him a considerable sum of money and, like a prudent man, he decided to assume another name and retire from the world. He has retired very smoothly and safely, his past has been forgotten, and he is not likely to come into prominence again."

"Where—where in heaven's name is he?"

"He is a member of parliament for a district in South Australia, and a prominent farmer there. He is happily married and has four children."

"And that's the man I once loved and married?" murmured Thelma Norton. And suddenly she turned to Lesson.

"You are getting probably a large sum for your investigations. I don't know whether you get more for finding this evidence, but have you no pity at all?"

"Pity doesn't go with my profession, Mrs. Norton."

"My little boy, deprived of a mother's care, my reputation—"

"I can do nothing for you, Mrs. Norton," answered the detective.

"Then God do so to you and more also!" she retorted, as she swept out of the office.

Next afternoon Lesson stood before his employer. Norton chewed his cigar at his desk, Lesson had his typewriter report in his pocket.

"Lesson," said Norton, "I sent for you because—"

"See here, I guess there's nothing you can find. Thelma isn't that type of woman. So—we've got to manufacture something. See? Some evidence that'll give me what I want. We've got to get false affidavits and—"

Lesson started. "We don't do that kind of business, Mr. Norton," he answered.

"Don't, eh? Then I'll have to get someone who does. You've had a fine lot of money out of me, and so far you've found out absolutely nothing."

"Absolutely nothing," answered Lesson, "and your next employees are likely to find out absolutely nothing too, because—Mrs. Norton's life has been entirely blameless."

A Rule for Public Speaking. I once asked Colonel Ingersoll, the most effective public speaker I ever heard of, to what he attributed his power. "Avoid eloquentisms like snakes," he said, "and be yourself." Andrew Carnegie in his Autobiography.

Water Supplies

Polluted by Poor Sewage Disposal

Improper disposal of sewage accounts for the large number of contaminated water supply systems that are to be found in both country and city, according to a new circular entitled, "Septic Tanks for Sewage Disposal," which has just come off the press at the College of Agriculture and which is being distributed free to interested persons. The new publication points out that the septic tank with the subsurface disposal system not only is superior to cesspools, chemical closets and other means of sewage disposal but also has proved to be the most satisfactory method of disposing of waste in rural homes where running water is available.

A septic tank is an underground, water-tight tank in which the solid matter in sewage is liquefied by decay before being discharged from the tank into the disposal bed, space for which usually is available on every farm. Work of laying the tile and constructing the tank can be done by the average farmer. In addition the tank can be built at some time when other work is not pressing, thus making it possible to utilize labor. Most of the materials needed for the average tank can be found on the farm so that the actual cash outlay for a concrete septic tank will not be high. When properly installed, this method of sewage disposal requires little attention.

Important points to be considered in constructing the tank together with important factors that must be considered in building the disposal bed are outlined in the new circular which contains many drawings and illustrations to show the proper methods of construction. Working plans for the two common types of septic tanks—single and double-chamber—along with the method of constructing forms, mixing and placing the concrete, a discussion of steel reinforcements and suggestions in regard to the operation of septic tanks are given in the new publication. Complete bills of material for both the single and double-chamber tanks also are given in the circular. It is No. 131 and may be obtained free by writing the Experiment Station, Lexington.

CONTROL LEAFHOPPER
BY USE OF BORDEAUX

Mixture Is Best Remedy, Says
Department of Agriculture.

Combined With Nicotine Sulphate It Acts Little More Quickly but Is Expensive—Spraying Must Be Thorough.

Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Results of two years' work have shown that Bordeaux mixture will keep the leafhopper, control "hopper-burn," and is the best remedy, declares the United States Department of Agriculture in Farmers' Bulletin 1225, "The Potato Leafhopper and Its Control," now published for the benefit of growers whose crops are menaced by this serious insect pest. Bordeaux mixture made according to the 4-4-50 formula, containing 4 pounds of copper sulphate and 4 pounds of slaked lime to 50 gallons of water was used.

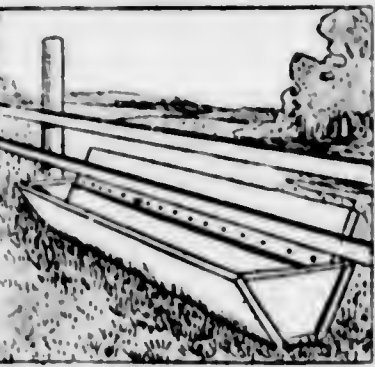

Bordeaux combined with nicotine sulphate acts a little more quickly in ridding vines of leafhoppers than does Bordeaux alone, but the results obtained do not appear to justify the added time and expense of using the added ingredient, it is said. Nicotine sulphate and soap combined were found very effective in killing nymphs and a few adults present when the spray was applied. There was no lasting effect, however, because leafhoppers reappeared in a few days. "Hopper-burn" was not controlled.

The spray should be applied to the underside of the leaves thoroughly, at least 150 pounds pressure being used so that a fine mistlike spray is produced. At least three applications are recommended, with a fourth if necessary to keep down "hopper-burn" until the crop is matured. Both sides of each row should be sprayed to make the application thorough. Additional details are contained in the bulletin which may be had free upon application to the department at Washington, D. C.

HANDY TROUGH TO FEED HOGS

Board Nailed on One Side Prevents Animal From Getting More Than His Share.

Feeding hogs in the usual manner often results in spilled feed and many times one hog will get more than his share. A person can, of course, go into the pen and pour the slop directly into the trough, but usually the hogs try to get into the pen and make a mess of things, writes Paul Gorton.

Handy to Feed Hogs.

In Power Farming, one farmer solved the problem by nailing a board to one side of the trough, allowing it to extend through the side of the pen. He can now feed them easily and with the board extending the entire length of the trough he can spread the feed the whole length of the trough and so give them all an equal share.

PICTURE SHOWS BEE-KEEPING

Film Outlines Best Practices in Handling Honey Gatherers and Control of Disease.

Bee keepers will be interested in a new motion picture prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture showing the best practice in handling bees and the control of bee diseases. The film, which is called "Keeping Bees at Work," is intended to supplement a picture, entitled "How—How They Live and Work," issued some time ago for more popular use. The new picture shows the need for keeping the colony from time to time, the way to prepare the bees for carrying—time to unpack the hives, the control of the swarm, and other details of management. The fact that the bureau of entomology will examine samples of combs to identify diseases and advise on their control is brought out.

The film, seen on reel, and may be borrowed by extension workers and others, entitled to the privilege, or prints may be purchased for approximately the cost of making them, which is about $5.

USE MILLET FOR LATE FEED

Small Amount of Land May Be Prepared and Planted at Little Cost—It Thrives on It.

Many farmers find a late patch of millet hard to grow. It has not been left and weeds, may be prepared and planted at a small cost in seed and fertilizer and considerable feed produced in ordinary seasons. German millet makes good feed when properly prepared. Horses, mules and cattle like it and thrive on it.
